One step back for coal mine reform

Four years after the Supreme Court declared them illegal, state PSUs are signing up MDO contracts, this time with legal backing and secrecy provided by the Union government

New Delhi, 22 October

ancelling the allocation of 204 coal blocks in August 2014, the Supreme Court said several of these had opened an illegal and arbitrary backdoor for the private sector to enter the mining business. The apex court found state government-owned companies formed jointventure companies with the private sector to get coal blocks. These then handed over control to private players by signing Mining Development and Operation (MDO) contracts. It held this practice of the state public sector units or PSUs to be illegal (central PSUs were excluded from this ban).

Unlike a plain vanilla subcontractor, a coal MDO is required to not just mine, but run the whole show, from securing clearances, acquiring land, rehabilitation of displaced people, financing, development, mining and the operation and maintenance of the coal mine. The private company promises delivery of coal to the PSU at agreed terms and prices.

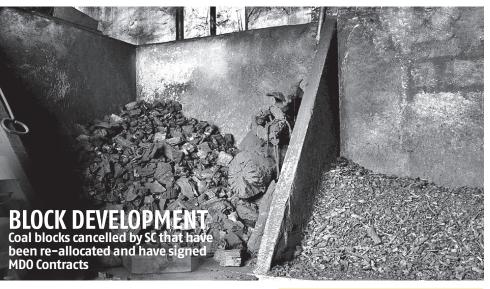

Yet, this MDO model has become the private mining industries' route to cornering a larger piece of the coal mining business again. So far, out of the 204 coal blocks, 31 have been auctioned (five of these have been cancelled). Nearly double that number, 58, have been allotted to state and central government PSUs at a much lower reserve price. Of the allotted blocks, 15 have already tied up for MDOs and many others are in the process of doing so. Eleven of them involve state government PSUs.

This time, however, the National Democratic Alliance has provided MDO contracts legislative backing, and a veil of secrecy over the contracts.

The Union government has said that, at its discretion, the details of the MDO contracts can be withheld from disclosure even under Right to Information (RTI) Act. State governments PSUs that have signed up MDOs have subsequently refused to disclose the terms of such contracts under RTI.

The MDO business, now with clear legal support, is attracting many private players (see table) while direct commercial mining remains a plan on paper. The Adani group has bagged the most -four mines comprising six blocks. It has also bagged the MDO for a seventh block, Kente Extension, from the Rajasthan government, which did not form part of the 204 cancelled by Supreme Court. The company held mining interests in three of these five before the Supreme Court's ruling, either as MDO or as joint-ventures with the state PSUs.

Industry players see potential for rapid growth, particularly if the government allocates more coal blocks to state PSUs with no mining expertise instead of auctioning them directly to miners. Thus, in FY18, Adani Enterprises earned a revenue of ₹8.6 billion from the state and central government coal MDO contracts with its earnings before interest, tax, depreciation and amortisation or EBITDA — a measure of a company's operating performance pegged at ₹4.6 billion, says an investor presentation by the company. This was from MDO contracts for total mineable reserves of 2.1 billion tonnes.

The company hopes to tap more into a potential MDO business worth 52 billion tonne of coal from the NDA government allocating and auctioning more blocks that the Supreme Court cancelled in in 2014. Several other players in the market are looking to increase their share in the market.

How did state PSUs' MDO business become legal? In 2015, the NDA brought, first, and ordinance and then passed the Coal Mines (Special Provisions) Act through Parliament allowing both — auctions fetching a higher amount of potential revenue and direct allocations to not just central PSUs but also state PSUs. The new laws and regulations also permitted state government PSUs to bid out their coal blocks to MDOs.

Initially the rules required that allocations follow strict strict criteria. But the Union government diluted these regulations in 2015. It gave itself the discretion to allocate coal blocks only to central PSUs without following the parameters "in public interest" that was to be put down in writing.

In response to an RTI, the Union government has admitted that it has not followed its own regulations of keeping track of these MDO contracts to ensure they follow the laws. The coal ministry does not have a copy of a single one of the 15 MDO contracts,

The possible advantage of the MDO model for a PSU lies in getting the private company to run the coal block and provide a supply of coal at a steady and cheaper supply to other alternatives. But as Priyanshu Gupta, researching the coal sector after the Supreme Court 2014 order at IIM Calcutta, points out, "Unless the terms of the MDO contracts are known, one cannot say who has really gained from this dispensation. Are we back to the pre-2014 situation? The only way to assess is to know the details of the contracts. But the Union government is not maintaining these records and the states are not

In August 2018, Congress Member of Parliament Digvijay Singh submitted a Parliamentary question asking the government to clarify whether MDO agreements can be accessed through RTI applications or to disclose the "details of the key commercial terms of all such agreements".

Minister for Coal Piyush Goyal replied, "It has been mandated by the Government that the selection of Mine Developer and Operator (MDO) be done through a transparent and competitive bidding process. The provisions of Right to Information Act, 2005 and disclosure requirements specified in Model Contract Agreement are applicable on such agreements." But the Model Contract document that Goyal referred to puts the actual MDO agreements with PSUs outside the pale of RTI Act at the Union government's discretion! The model MDO document sent to states to follow states that the agreement would be a "protected document" which the state or central governments could decide not to disclose even under Right to Information Act, 2005. Thus, the Rajasthan stripped the commercial terms from the MDO agreement with the Adani group to disclose it under RTI, though the contract in question dated back to 2008, before the Supreme Court had cancelled the block.

The RTI Act does not provide for any particular "protected documents" being kept out of its purview at the government's discretion. It does provide that authorities can deny information that breaches commercial confidence, trade secrets or intellectual property, the disclosure of which would harm the competitive position of a third party, unless the government is satisfied that public interest warrants the disclosure of such information. At the same time, government guidelines on RTI require proactive disclosure of details of "public-private partnerships" — but no state government has done so with its MDO agreements.

The firm that pays staff to get full night's sleep

Kazuhiko Moriyama is betting that well-rested workers are good for business. In fact, he's placing real money on the wager.

Employees who sleep at least six hours a night, for at least five days a week, are awarded points by Crazy Inc., a wedding organiser in Japan. The points can be exchanged for food in the company cafeteria worth as much as 64,000 yen ($570) per year. Nightly rest will be tracked using an app made by Airweave Inc, a mattress manufacturer.

More than 92 per cent of Japanese over the age of 20 say that they aren't getting enough sleep, according to a survey by Fuji Ryoki, a health-products maker. Thanks to a labour shortage and long-held cultural belief of noble sacrifice for the corporate good, Japan has become notorious for a phenomenon called death-from-overwork, which claimed the life of an ad agency employee in 2015. Employees with happier lives will lead to better performance at the office, according to Moriyama.

Employees who sleep at least 6 hours a night, for at least 5 days a week, are awarded points that can be exchanged for food in the company cafeteria worth as much as 64,000 yen ($570) per year

'You have to protect workers' rights, otherwise the country itself will weaken,' Moriyama said. In addition to the sleep incentives, Crazy also promotes better nutrition, exercise and a more positive office environment. Child support is available, as well the opportunity to take company vacations on regular business days.

There's some evidence that more sleep will lead to improved business performance and higher economic growth. Insufficient sleep costs the U.S. economy as much as $411 billion a year, or 2.28 percent of GDP, according to a 2009 study by Rand Corp. For Japan, the loss is estimated to be $138 billion, or 2.92 percent of GDP.

"I eventually want to reach a million employees," Moriyama said. "I want to do something that other people will think is
